Studio 54's former manager says three of the most important people at the legendary New York nightclub were on cocaine and LSD. In an interview with TMZ, former Studio 54 manager Steve Rubell said the infamous club was "a three-hit club." "When it started it was fine, you could go in and have a good time," Rubell said. "It was $5 a person, you know? It was early on. But soon it got to the point where it was a free-for-all." Rubell continued: "The people who went there to get high, they were the true stars of Studio 54. Everyone else was just sort of along for the ride." In 1987, Rubell and business partner Ian Schrager opened the club, which was notorious for having wild, drug-fueled parties. Rubell and Schrager were convicted in 1984 of conspiring to sell cocaine. The club closed in 2002. "And these are the three people who would go in and put stuff in their noses to get high," Rubell said. "That's all they had time for." Last week, Rubell told Vulture that the former Studio 54 employees were "running around high." Rubell continued: "I went downstairs to a parking lot at the club and saw a person who looked like he might be an ex-employee of Studio 54, and he had three or four coke cans in his shirt pocket and was smoking a cigarette. I stopped and asked him, 'What are you doing?' He looked at me, and said, 'I'm just smoking one for the road.'" albumsFollowing the "Frozen" story, the world seemed to come alive with a renewed interest in knitting and crochet. The Danish design aficionado Ingeborg Guldberg has created an accessory based on the most famous of the three brothers—Elsa's snowman—and the A-listers have stolen it. She wears Elsa's snowman on her head. There's even a little logo on the knit hat, so that you know it's official. We think Elsa should get in on the craze and wear a snowman on her head too. The hat is extremely cute—and there's a good chance that Elsa will steal it away from Anna in their next big dance number.
